

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1

PART I Archaeologies of Moving Image Transmission

1 Ancient Affiliates: The Nineteenth-Century
Origins of Cinema and Television 17

2 Severed Eyeballs and Prolonged Optic Nerves:
Television as Modern Prosthetic Vision 50

3 Happy Combinations of Electricity and Photography: Moving Image Transmission in the Early Cinema Era 74

PART II Debating the Specificity of Television, On- and Off-Screen

4 Cinema's Radio Double: Hollywood Comes to Terms with Television 105

5 "We Must Prepare!": Dziga Vertov and the Avant-Garde Reception of Television 145

6 Thinking across Media: Classical Film Theory's
Encounter with Television 167

Conclusion 184

Notes 189

Bibliography 221

Index 239