

Contents

---

CHAPTER I—INTRODUCTORY

1. Confusions of film controversy	page 25
2. Aims of the present study	29
3. The purpose of illustrations and examples	31
4. The balance between assumption and verification	33
5. The value of distinctions	35
6. The domains of scientific and philosophical definition	37

CHAPTER II—DEFINITIONS

THE TOTAL FILM (C) COMPRISES A VISUAL FILM (A) AND A SOUND-FACTOR (B).

A. The Visual Film.	44
a. The film material (1-9): the mechanical principle, speeds, cutting, dissolves, fades
b. The camera (1-8): positions and movements	46
c. Illusion (1-4): filmic space and time; trick processes	47
d. Description (1-5): titles of various types	48

Contents

---

B. The Sound-Factor.	page 48
a. Speech (1-4): realistic and unrealistic uses	48
b. Sound (1-2): realistic and unrealistic uses	49
c. Music (1-5): realistic and unrealistic uses	49
C. The Total Film.	50
a. Construction (1-10): different types of montage	50
b. Categories (1-7): different types of film	52
c. Effect (1-4): different types of effect produced by the film and its component parts	53

CHAPTER III—AN OUTLINE OF FILM HISTORY

1. Absence of film classics related to historical and economic causes	54
2. The earliest developments	57
3. Germany (1919-25)	59
4. Russia (1920-30)	63
5. Germany (Pabst)	69
6. America (Chaplin)	70
7. France (Clair)	71
8. England (Asquith)	72
9. Hollywood and the advent of sound	73
10. America	76
11. Germany (1929-34) (Pabst)	80

Contents

---

12. France (1929-34)	page 82
13. Russia (1930-34)	83
14. The advance-guard (1920-33)	86
15. The G.P.O. Film Unit	87
16. The interaction of personal, economic and political factors in film production	93

CHAPTER IV—CATEGORIES OF THE FILM

a. DISTINCTIONS

1. The method of investigation involves a considerable recourse to abstraction	102
2. The relation of cinema to stage	104
3. The film based on their similarity	107
4. The film based on their difference	109
5. The abandonment of drama	111
6. The film based on the cinema's independ- ent properties, but borrowing where necessary from other arts, which is the subject of Chapters V and VI	112

CHAPTER V—TECHNIQUE OF THE FILM

1. ANALYSIS

1. Visual and aural material of the cinema	114
2. Analysis of structure and synthesis of effect	117
3. Separation of the cut from its substitutes, and consideration of the latter: fade, dissolve, wipe	118

Contents

---

4. Credit and continuity titles	page 124
5. Introduction of the divergences from realistic reproduction to be found within the shot: differentiating factors	127
6. The non-optical factors: the coenaesthesia	128
7. The static factors: camera angle and position	131
8.     The close-up	138
9.     Delimitation of the screen	141
10.     The expanding screen	145
11.     Colour and lighting	146
12.     Applied to the synthetic film	152
13.     Flatness	152
14.     The stereoscopic film	154
15. The dynamic factors: camera movement	156
16.     The mechanism of attention	156
17.     Tilting	160
18. The filmic factors: camera speed	161
19.     Fast motion	162
20.     Slow motion	163
21.     The temporal close-up	164
22.     Reversal	166
23.     Optical distortion	167
24.     Focus	168
25.     Superimposition	169
26.     Reduplication	172

Contents

27. Sound: classification	page 173
28.     Realism—unrealism	174
29.     Counterpoint	176
30.     Realistic counterpoint	177
31.     Unrealism	178
32.     Parallelism—contrast	180
33.     Examples	185
34.     The internal monologue	185
35.     The imitative use of music	190
36.     The evocative use of music	190
37.     The dynamic use of music	191
38. The relation of the scenario to montage: the denial of montage	193

CHAPTER VI—TECHNIQUE OF THE FILM

2. SYNTHESIS

1. Summary and scope of this and the pre- vious chapter	198
2. Previous definitions of montage: Mr. Dalton, Mr. Braun	199
3. The cut	201
4. Antithesis, implication and obliquity	202
5. The dialectical process in life and personal experience	204
6. Rhythmical montage	206
7.     Summary	220
8.     Contrastive rhythmical montage	222
9. The main function of montage	223

Contents

---

10. Primary montage	page 224
11. Simultaneous montage	227
12. Secondary montage and implicational montage	231
13. Ideological montage	233
14. An example illustrating every type of montage	234
15. Factors adverse to montage	238
16. Realism of sound, solidity, delayed transference	239
17. Camera movement	240
18. Abstraction	243
19. Speech	244
20. Titles	246
21. The visual simile	247
22. Relations	251
23. 'Like'	252
24. Modes and components of the appreciation of films	254
25. The relation of technique to subject- matter	262
26. Teleological theories: Marx	263
27. Deontological theories: Croce	268
28. Contrasts and comparisons	271

Contents

---

CHAPTER VII—CATEGORIES OF THE FILM

b. DESCRIPTIONS

1. Origin of the documentary movement in the class struggle page 275
2. The film symphony and the documentary movement 280
3. Definition of the documentary: Mr. Grierson 284
4. Mr. Braun 285
5. Mr. Blakeston 287
6. A new definition suggested and tested by several criteria 288
7. Characteristics of the documentary 295
8. The danger of categories in making films:
their necessity in criticizing them 296
9. The imagist film 297
10. The synthetic film: description by degrees of naturalism 299
11. The silhouette film 300
12. The model film 301
13. The drawn film 302
14. The limitations of the synthetic film in respect of unrealism 303
15. Conclusions 306

CHAPTER VIII—CONCLUSION

1. The denunciation of the cinema: reply to
Mr. Ervine 308

Contents

---

2. The extravagant praise of the cinema: reply to Eisenstein and Pudovkin	page 311
3. The function of criticism in the advance- ment of the cinema	312
4. The scope of training studios	314
Index	317
Chart	at the end of the book