

Table of contents

1. Introduction _____ 9

- 1.1. About the dissertation
- 1.2. Points of departure
- 1.3. Sources and source criticism
- 1.4. Geographical scope
- 1.5. Thematic focus
- 1.6. Theoretical framework and terminology
- 1.7. Animation as a chronicle of its times
- 1.8. The artistic part of the dissertation

2. Summary of the chapters _____ 29

- 2.1. Dystopia and involuntary surrealism in animated film
- 2.2. Surrealist sources of Eastern European animation film
- 2.3. On links between caricatures and animated films
- 2.4. On the topics and style of Soviet animated films
- 2.5. Body Memory

3. Dystopia and Involuntary Surrealism in Animated Film _____ 41

- 3.1. Involuntary surrealism
- 3.2. Automatism

- 3.3. Duplications, repetitions and cycles
- 3.4. Compositing
- 3.5. Metaphysics
- 3.6. Oneirism
- 3.7. Woman as an abstract object
- 3.8. Conclusion

4. Surrealist Sources of Eastern European Animation Film _____ 59

- 4.1. Introduction
- 4.2. The advent of surrealism
- 4.3. Surrealists and cinema
- 4.4. The surrealist essence of animation film
- 4.5. The consistency of surrealism
- 4.6. The uncanny as the measure of surrealism in animation film
- 4.7. Who are considered surrealists by animation film-makers?
- 4.8. The geography of surrealist animation
- 4.9. Conclusion

5. On Links between Caricatures and Animated Films in communist Eastern Europe _____ 83

- 5.1. The nature of caricature
- 5.2. Caricatures start to move and turn into films
- 5.3. Developments of animated film in the Eastern Bloc

- 5.4. Aesopian language
- 5.5. Communist caricatures and cartoons as visualised Aesopian dialectics
- 5.6. Peculiarities of Eastern European humour
- 5.7. Summary and contemporary situation

6. On Topics and Style in Soviet Animated Films _____ 105

- 6.1. The Post-revolutionary period
- 6.2. The Stalin era
- 6.3. Visual form and style
- 6.4. The Khrushchev thaw
- 6.5. Animation industry in the Baltic republics
- 6.6. Brezhnev and stagnation
- 6.7. The positive effects of the planned economy
- 6.8. Animation, collective consciousness and identity: between past and present
- 6.9. Gorbachev's perestroika and the dissolution of the Soviet Union
- 6.10. The image of woman in Soviet animated film
- 6.11. Conclusion

7. Body Memory _____ 137

- 7.1. A Train to the Land of Fear: creating Body Memory
- 7.2. Prof Richard Raskin's interview (2014) with Ülo Pikkov on Body Memory
- 7.3. A shot-by-shot breakdown of Body Memory
- 7.4. The shooting storyboard of Body Memory
- 7.5. Body Memory participation in festivals
- 7.6. Body Memory prizes and awards

8. Conclusions_____201

9. Appendix_____221

- 9.1. Apple Trees and Barbed Wire -
Estonian Memories of Soviet Occupation
in Body Memory
(Jakob Ladegaard)
- 9.2. Into What Future?
(Ruth Barton)
- 9.3. Perception of Sound in/as Body Memory
(Iben Have)
- 9.4. A Choreographic Analysis of Body Memory
(Yutian Wong)
- 9.5. Unravelling the Body Without Organs
in Body Memory
(Nicole Richter)
- 9.6. From concrete horror to symbolic significance in Ülo Pikkov's Body Memory
(Edvin Kau)
- 9.7. The Return of the Animated Dead in
Body Memory
(Vlad Dima)

Acknowledgements_____262