

CONTENTS

1

How an amateur turns professional, resolving to do it differently from most of the others p. 9

2

How he converts the house of a famous Victorian painter into his photographic studio with taste and a shrewd sense of business p. 16

3

How a young portrait photographer should set out and how to continue not to be commonplace and cheap p. 25

4

How the Great turn up to be his sitters, how he handled them and how others ought p. 34

Portraits, pp. 47-64

5

How cameras have changed during the last twenty-five years and how far they are still from perfection p. 66

6

How moody and vain and amusing and lovable some very famous people are when facing a camera p. 75

Different Portraits, pp. 81-89

7

How difficult it is to decide who was the most beautiful of the women photographed by one who photographed so many ... p. 90

Glimpses of London, pp. 105-113

8

How to become a very well known man by avoiding advertising while relying on more subtle ways of good publicity p. 114

Pictorial Studies, pp. 125-144

9

How to break into new fields with the camera in the service of commerce but without sacrifice to one's artistic self p. 145

10

How much more photographic journalism can be than just press photography by keeping count of ideas and looking for the least obvious markets p. 154

11

How to travel to foreign parts, what equipment to take and how not to be outwitted by strange conditions of light and temperature p. 170

12

How to be at home and welcome in any part of the world by keeping the eyes open and one's reputation sound p. 182

Records of the Picturesque, pp. 198-216

13

How to be content with having done a job of photography—and how the reader could follow in the author's footsteps ... p. 217

Index, pp. 228-229