

CONTENTS

	PAGE
PUBLISHER'S NOTE . . . . .	7
FOREWORD . . . . .	17

CHAPTER ONE

Critical approach to the Film—An ancient prophecy—Some reminiscences—The magic-lantern and cinematograph—Onset of "Cinemia"—The Boxers and the Clown—Anticipating Noël Coward—New York, and Al Jolson—The "tragedy" of a silent picture—Fox and Warners—Difference between lantern and motion-picture projector—Phenomenon of Persistence of Vision—Early history—Friese-Greene, Edison and others—"Sound" is not True Cinema—The "talkie" war—Britain versus U.S.A.—British studios of to-day—"Imported" talent, and a plea for the home-product—The Soviet and Germany—Further facts and figures—Sound-on-Disc—The photo-electric cell—Variable width : variable density—More confusion—The coming of Colour—The Stereoscopic Film—Photo-micrography—Where Colour fails, and succeeds—The Third Dramatic Dimension—La Cucaracha, and the beginning of a Boom—Television . . . . .

25

CHAPTER TWO

Art and mechanics—The bubble of enchantment—Bursting the bubble—The other side of the picture—The glamour of the Film—"Hippolyta" versus sprockets!—Can the two be reconciled?—Two régimes—"Technique" can ruin a film—The spinster in Surbiton—A modern industry : a modern generation—The fascination of "technique"—The literary instinct plus the mechanical instinct—The Big Name—Authors' attitude towards the Film—Minney sums it up—The Film cannot be static—The example of Olga and Olaf—Wells, and Things to Come—Producers versus authors——"The wrong sort of people"—A Production "Budget"—Charles Chaplin and Walt Disney—The "star-system"—"Adolphus Smith" versus "Stella Shallow"—The public won't think for themselves—Views of an author—"Can British films be saved?"—The case of The Phantom Light—Tampering with titles—The authors' remedy—Truth about "film-editions"—Altering the story—Authors do not appreciate technical difficulties—Dialogue—The authors' remedy : continued—Ben Travers speaks—Thinking in words versus thinking in pictures—The moths and the Candle

62

CHAPTER THREE

Facts about "film-rights"—Ben Hur, and Sinclair Lewis—Big money—Position of the unknown author—The "star-system" again—An appeal to the "star-makers"—Result of the "National Film Investigation"—Conrad's pessimism, and the truth about authorship—Authors who criticise the Film—What authors think of directors—Brunel and Pudovkin—How the Box-office influences directors—Work of the leading directors analysed : The "commercial" director—The "highbrow" director—Directors who employ symbolism—Von Sternberg and Von Stroheim—"Imaginative" directors—Fritz Lang—The Hands of Orlac—The dangers of morbid pathology—Great acting in Love from a Stranger—Spiritualistic films—As the Censor sees it—King Kong, and what the technicians really can do—“Sophisticated” directors—Author-directors—Hecht and MacArthur—The Scoundrel—The “Russian School”—Pudovkin’s methods—Symbolical and Associative “cutting”—Growth of the Soviet Film—The views of André Gide—Soviet educational films—“What is life?”—Study the Soviet Cinema—Camera-work as a director’s signature—The Miracle of Life—The Screen and the social reformer—The directorial function—The last analysis . . . . .

PAGE

105

CHAPTER FOUR

Medals that matter—The B.I.C., and Alfred Hitchcock—From The Pleasure Garden to The Thirty-nine Steps—Manhandling Madeleine—If “Hitch” were an amateur—The Human Documentary—Ideas for the Human Documentary—The House of a Thousand Candles—“Cutting” and “cross-cutting”—Tempo—Parallel “cutting”—Theory of “Time-translation”—Screen revue and musical-comedy—The dancing-picture paradox—A sequence from Brewster’s Millions—Stage spectacles are seldom “cinematic”—Skating films—Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers—Roberta—Shakespeare, and screen operas—A note re composers—The Dance Band film—Moonlight Sonata—The Thin Man, and W. S. Van Dyke—Trader Horn—Great South Sea pictures—A “volcanic” suggestion—Cecil de Mille, and The Ten Commandments, etc.—Herbert Wilcox, and “Olde England”—Anna Neagle, and star-director partnerships—Rex Ingram, and The Four Horsemen—The Documentary Film—Robert J. Flaherty, and Man of Aran—The news-reels, and the methods of Andrew Buchanan—The life-story of a salmon—The Ideal Cinema—Sound-accompaniment versus dialogue—Metropolis, and the evils of careless presentation—The Film of the Future—A London Evening—The amateur’s responsibility—Charles Chaplin, and the Art that is immortal . . . . .

169

CHAPTER FIVE

“A Plea for the Author-Director”—From “Yellow Book” to “Flying Flea”—A new recruiting-ground—“A question of adaptability”—Wells; Korda; Cameron Menzies—Civilised discussion, and the Other Man’s point of view—Where the author-director scores—Goldwyn’s prediction—The attitude of Mervyn Leroy—The example of the Artistic Cinema—Andrew Buchanan, and the “One-Mind” picture—Curbing “inspiration,” and the ruthlessness of “cutting”—Pudovkin’s definition—The definition amended—“Dialects” of film-making—Visual “shots”: audible “notes”—“Cutting” to music and dialogue—Prayer on the Bounty—The imprint of “the first-class man”—Cavalcade—The future of the “vital link” . . . . .

250

CHAPTER SIX

Production preliminaries—Executives; officials; and the distribution of work in a studio—The excellence of modern camera-work—What is film-acting?—A star’s opinion—Physical attributes, and the actor’s nervous system—Temperament and trouble—“Talking Picture”: a novel about film-

CONTENTS

13

PAGE

making—Function of the screen-actor—Elisabeth Bergner—Two “shining, glorious examples”—Life’s tragi-comedy—Jean Harlow and others—The casting department—“Typed” actors—How “extra-players” are “grouped” and classified—The “pulling power” of the star—The versatility of repertory-artists—Is stage-training essential?—The untrained actor—The fallacy of “grooming”—The degradation of lingerie—The evolution of Ginger Rogers—The actor must retain his individuality—Letter from an Indignant Lady—Naturalness: the “hallowed secret”—Stage-acting contrasted with screen-acting—The directorial conception and “directorial construction of the actor’s work”—Handling actors, and the problem of continuity—Further problems in continuity—Establishing the “mood”—The actor as a sensitive instrument—Advantages of adolescence—Vanity: the deadly sin—Peasants and servant-girls—Where the Stage fails and the Film triumphs— All Quiet on the Western Front — Gabriel Over the White House — Anna Karenina — Atlantic —The conclusion of the case for the Film’s pre-eminence . . . . .	266
--	-----

CHAPTER SEVEN

The advent of the film-critic, and the value of constructive criticism—How artists react to criticism—The Film Industry should “take its medicine”—Films we forget, and remember—The “nitric acid” test— Broken Blossoms , and Richard Barthelmess—Nazimova—Some “First National” productions— The Sin Flood —Those tropic-island idylls—My personal bias, and the “prophetic” pictures—Norma Talmadge—Sea films—Gilda Gray, and Aloma — Rain —How “South Sea” epics are made—Some more sea pictures— Treasure Island — China Seas , Clark Gable, and Ronald Colman—A suggestion for producers—Hitchcock and “adaptations”—The “problem of finding suitable stories,” and the reason why it exists—“Sheik” films— Bengal Lancer —An episode from Chu Chin Chow —From Fairbanks to Flecker— White Cargo , and a note re sound-recording—Spiritualistic films again— The Clairvoyant —Some earlier “epics”—Overlooked artists, and an Unrisen Star—Fritz Lang in Hollywood—The UFA heyday—Important Continental productions— The Informer — The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari —Is the psycho-analytical film a success?—German intelligence—Spencer Tracy: Dante’s Inferno and Fury —“The most accomplished film-actor in the world”—A painter-director— Things to Come and Metropolis —The purpose of the mechanistic sequence—“Acting” interest and “feminine” interest— The Man who could Work Miracles —Why Things to Come evoked a new era in production—Where faith should lie—More imaginative pictures—Incident from The Tunnel — Green Pastures and Lost Horizon —Rounding-off the critic’s log-book, and my catalogue of Great Motion-pictures—The real tragedy of the Commercial Film . . . .	325
--	-----

CHAPTER EIGHT

“The Professional of to-morrow”—Importance of the individual worker and advantages of non-professional experiments—Some famous amateur films—The amateur’s limitations—Absence of Sound—A note on making home-“talkies”—An attitude of “arrant nonsense”—The story-film as the ideal training-ground—Allegations against the Amateur Film—A £20 equipment—Ready-made scene-sets—Cheap lighting-aids—Amateur photography, and the shortcomings of sub-standard cameras—A “track-shot” on a tea-trolley—Amateur acting—Herr Strasser’s dictums—Choosing the amateur cast—Comedy versus tragedy—Dolly Haas; Yvonne Arnaud; Cicely Courtneidge—W. C. Fields, and Poppy—Cedric Hardwicke, and Laburnum Grove—Directors to follow—The “Montage Film”—Two hundred feet of wasted stock, and what became of it—It is the idea that counts—A “glorious heritage”—The future of the Film, and the part the public must play . . . . . 399
---	--

BIBLIOGRAPHY . . . . . 425

INDEX . . . . . 429